TOO SICK TO STAND TRIAL INSANE FOR FIFTEEN YEARS. SUICIDE WITHOUT

of Stephen Pettus's Slayer.

Her Ever Appearing in Court.

When Mrs. Hanna B, Southworth, the murderess of Major Stephen Pettus, was onth ago, it was announced that she was to have a speedy trial, and that the final proceedings in her case would certainly be had before the middle of December at the very latest.

It was claimed by her friends that she was to be pitied rather than condemned for her terrible crime, and that a public trial would result inevitably in her triumphant vindication.

Society and the general public are in a state of hervous currouty to know whether or not Mrs. James G. Blaime will assist at the Previdential reception on New Year's Day. The question is the subject of considerable grassip about the city, and the opinion is pretty general that neither Mrs. Blaine nor her daugh'ers will attend this or any other reception away at the White House while Mrs. Harrison remains the first lady of the land.

There is more truth than fiction in this statement, and while President Harrison and his like one of their daily life, it is a well-ki own fact that there exists letween their wives a social chasm which can never be bridged over.
